I've worked with global brands through transformational moments — reframing what a brand stands for in people's minds. At P&G I turned SK-II from an aging skincare brand into one that championed women's self-determination, pioneering new retail experiences to win younger users across Asia. At Meta, I helped expand Facebook from a place for friends and family into a community-led platform, and shifted Instagram from a place for curated public sharing into one that celebrates everyday creativity as a way to connect.

In every role the same truth has held: Brand is product, product is brand. Brand and product work best when they're built around the same shared vision for the audience. I care about technology as a force for genuine human connection — and the stories that make people believe that's possible.

Repositioning Instagram around everyday creativity to regain relevance among youth

- Led the strategic shift towards 'Everyday Creativity' to align with the new sharing behavior of youth audiences in ephemeral, private spaces that celebrate raw, lo-fi sharing of the everyday, against the backdrop of IG's legacy image of a place for curated, public sharing for social clout.
- Drove close coordination with product teams to evolve the Instagram experience anchored on new features that support the brand narrative (DMs, Stories, Add yours, Close friends, Notes) through global campaigns and turning product launches into cultural moments, doubling youth consideration to use IG over the two year period and turning around the growth trajectory.
- Laid the strategic foundation for 'Make it anyway' campaign, a vision of building 'Team IG' : a group of ringleaders that embody the act of overcoming self doubt and taking creative chances to empower people to be creative in their own right big and small.
